Challenges

Co-funded by the European Union

- Missile attacks and bomb threats made face-to-face learning impossible
- the termination of face-to-face training revealed the need for reorientation and improvement of the teaching of practical disciplines on distance platforms and the ability to test the acquired knowledge and skills
- Blackout and lack of Internet in the temporarily occupied territories of Ukraine
- The close proximity to the front line and the occupied territories made the Dnipro a shelter for refugees (IDPs) and an outpost for the enemy
- Limited resources and time for conducting classes in full (airborne alarms caused the need to transfer the educational process to a shelter without specialized educational equipment)
- Reduction of training efficiency (daily training against DRG attacks of participants in the training process)
- The need to improve qualifications and reorient the content of training in accordance with new threats (explosive danger, radiological threats)
